Headword

Hello Everyone

This is the last time the newsletter will appear in this form. We'll be changing its format to a simpler update of what is happening in order to avoid the large and cumbersome pdf file that you are used to. Hopefully it will make it easier to find what is new and relevant. You will however be relieved to hear that I shall continue to write a headword full of pearls of wisdom. Since the last letter the Department has hosted Sandra Wallman who received her honorary doctorate from SU. Her seminar at the Department was well received and I hope we keep up the good attendance at coming seminars. Rumour has it that our doctoral students have located a suitable venue for this year's Christmas Table. It will be on December 11 but I'll let them fill you in on the details at the Staff meeting on Monday. On the subject of food, remember that there will be no sandwiches on Monday. So bring your own fodder or eat afterwards. There ought to be plenty of time. See you there.

»The Construction of Evidence-Based Psychotherapy: An Anthropological Inquiry into Health Care Infrastructure«

In recent decades, health care has been transformed by a movement towards so called evidence-based medicine. Foundational in this movement is the development of regional, national and transnational organizations for health technology assessment. A primary motivation for this movement is found in the perceived need to accomplish a more efficient health care apparatus. Yet through the methods employed by assessment organizations – making use of large quantities of data available through the new information and communication technologies – the concept of evidence is given a specific meaning, which also affects the way healing is thought about and accomplished.

This study aims to investigate the construction of evidence-based psychotherapy in Sweden. Fieldwork will be conducted in various organizations involved in constructing and upholding national guidelines for psychotherapeutic treatments, with the specific focus on how such ideals and practices transforms psychotherapy. The study thereby raises questions about how illness and health are conceptualized, how expertise is constructed and organized, and more generally about the constitution of health care infrastructure in a knowledge-based economy.

Hans Tunestad is currently lecturer at the Department of Social Anthropology at Stockholm University, from where he also received his PhD in May 2014. He is interested in the intertwinement of therapy and economy in contemporary welfare society.

»Incorporations: Capitalism and the Translation of Social Forms«

Incorporation, a process by which a group of individuals is constituted as a legal entity, should be placed alongside commoditization as a major mechanism through which human activities are drawn into capitalist processes. In contrast to commoditization, which draws labor, land, and things into capitalist transactions, incorporation brings the guidance of collective life into a capitalist order.

Through incorporation, groups become recognizable to economic and political actors. This paper will explore incorporation through an examination of the great variety of kinds of sociality that have translated themselves into the form of the Anglo-American corporation, including an Indian village, US churches, parts of the Pakistan army, Maori/Native American/Canadian tribes, New Guinea descent groups. Of particular interest is how both the pre-existing sociality and the emergent corporation are shaped by their relations.

Matthew Hull is Associate Professor of Anthropology at the University of Michigan. His research focuses on the nexus of representation, technology, and institutions. His book, Government of Paper: The Materiality of Bureaucracy in Urban Pakistan (University of California Press, May 2012), examines governance as a semiotic and material practice through an account of the role of writing and written artifacts in the operations of city government in Islamabad. He has also worked on the deployment of American technologies of democracy in urban India from the late 1950s and early 1960s. He is currently working on the history and theory of the modern corporation and lotteries in India.

»Viewing 'Palestine' from the Diaspora«

The last decades, the use of the term diaspora has basically exploded both among scholars and the general public. Diasporas seem to be everywhere and of very diverse kinds. Rogers Brubaker (2005) has warned that this inflation in the use of diaspora can make it useless as an analytical concept. Brubaker also alerts for the risks of essentializing diasporas as bounded, homogeneous units and of estimations of members in specific diasporas, which avoid the complexities of identity politics and of people's diverse relations to place. Belonging to a diaspora shouldn't merely be about counting ancestry. Brubaker's suggestion is that research should rather focus on diaspora as a category of practice that is used to make claims, to make projects and mobilize energies.

From that point of departure, I want to discuss how different diasporic practices as well as different migration tracks among Palestinians in Denmark and Sweden create very diverse views of 'those back home', namely Palestinians who have not migrated, but who still live either in the West Bank or inside Israel. Those perceptions of Palestinians 'back home' range from romantic views of them as resisting and politicized subjects to more critical comments about conservatism and demanding social relations. Some of my interlocutors even said that they loved the country but not its people.

Nina Gren holds a PhD in Social Anthropology from the University of Gothenburg. Her doctoral thesis from 2009 builds on a one-year ethnographic fieldwork in a Palestinian refugee camp during the second intifada. In short, the study dealt with the many ways that the camp inhabitants tried to maintain continuity, morality and a normal order despite repeated emergencies. A book based on this research will be published in 2015 with the American University Press in Cairo. Nina has also done research about Danes and Swedes with a Palestinian background and their diasporic practices, while being a post doc at the University of Copenhagen. In addition, she has carried out fieldwork in UN-run schools for Palestinian refugee children, focusing on processes of gendered identity formations. Nina is currently an affiliated researcher at the Centre of Middle Eastern Studies, Lund University and works as an external lecturer at the Department of Anthropology, University of Copenhagen.

Work in Progress

The work in progress seminar series gives room for PhD students in anthropology to present and discuss their ongoing work. The intention of this seminar is to provide PhD students with an informal platform for communicating research and get valuable feedback from fellow students and other colleagues. We welcome both shorter and more extensive presentations of project outlines, fieldwork material, thesis chapters, article drafts, conference papers, or discussions on theoretical concepts or methodological approaches. Whereas presentations are intended for PhD candidates, all researchers, staff and master students in anthropology are most welcome to attend!

If you would like to present your work or have any other questions, please contact Hege H. Leivestad hege.leivestad@socant.su.se.

Social Responsibility at a Distance: Caring, Parenting and Generation in Transnational Social Space Stockholm Anthropology Roundtable October 24-25, Kungstenen, Aula Magna, Stockholm University

In today's globalized world human practices of caring, parenting and generation are increasingly taking place in transnational social spaces. Migrants engage in parenting despite prolonged periods abroad while sending economic remittances to family members and even close friends. In addition they are often expected to contribute to local community development through financial investments or in other ways taking responsibility for the community's welfare and development.

When retirees or the independently wealthy from developed countries settle permanently or seasonally abroad, an inverse care deficit or a new economy of care emerges to cater to those in need of care and medical support. Through Information and Communications Technology (ICT) and faster economic remittance systems, social networks and families have moved into a transnational social space where they also become reorganized as social units.

Social responsibility at a distance will be organized around a series of panels that turn the spotlight on how self-imposed or assigned responsibilities are altered in the context of transnational migration or mobility, particularly in relation to different types of role divisions, such as parenthood or other close kinship social relationships within networks or local communities. The Roundtable will discuss, from an anthropological perspective, how different forms and practices of social responsibility are developed and reproduced. We have organized the discussion about these research questions into three panels:

1. Long Distance Caring
2. Transnational Retirees and Changing Forms of Care
3. Techno Parents and Cyberkids

The first panel will mainly focus on the changing roles and practices in transnational families, for example, how parenthood, childhood and intimacy are shaped by transnationalization. The second panel will focus mainly on care and other kind of social services in situations when older people migrate or approach old age away from conventional services and practices of caring. Both panels will have an interest in the way diasporas are assuming responsibility by developing collective practices or services for migrants. Finally, the third panel will discuss the use of ICT practices in the context of responsibility in transnational social spaces. How do people use new technologies when practicing their social responsibilities and what impact do these have on people's everyday life?

The Stockholm Anthropology Roundtable is devoted to short interventions by a dozen presenters who will give a short talk or statement which links to the panel's research topic. In conversation with the other presentations the researcher's statement should serve as an input for intense and fruitful discussions with the audience with the expressed intention of expanding the knowledge of the field while inspiring future research.

Stärkt organisation för upphandling

Universitetet ska få en ny och stärkt organisation för upphandlingsverksamheten. Central i organisationen blir Inköpssektionen vid Ekonomiavdelningen.

Upphandlingsverksamheten vid Stockholms universitet är av tradition decentraliserad, vilket innebär att upphandlingar sköts på institutionsnivå. Detta sätt att organisera upphandlingsverksamheten har kritiserats av Riksrevisionen och även uppmärksammats internt i universitetets riskanalys. Förvaltningschefen gav därför Planeringsavdelningen i uppdrag att, tillsammans med Ekonomiavdelningen, utreda organisationen av upphandlingsverksamheten.

Valår vid universitetet – snart dags att rösta!

Det är inte bara val till EU-parlament, riksdag, landsting och kommunfullmäktige i år. Även vid Stockholms universitet är det i år ”supervalår”. Under hösten väljs de som ska fatta viktiga beslut vid universitetet de närmaste tre åren.

Under hösten väljs och utses lärarrepresentanter i universitetsstyrelsen, de två områdesnämnderna, fakultetsnämnder och institutionsstyrelser. Universitetets båda vicerektorer och samtliga dekaner och prodekaner föreslås genom val och utses av rektor. I universitetsstyrelse, områdes- och fakultetsnämnd samt i institutionsstyrelse har studenterna rätt att vara representerade. Studenternas representanter utses av studentkåren för ett år.

»Stay true to your curiosity!«, seminar on writing research proposals

Thursday, October 23 at 13:00-14:30

The Research Liaison Office (Avdelningen för forsknings-service) organises seminars on writing research proposals and attracting external funding. Participation in the seminars of 2013 exceed our expectations, so there is obviously a large demand for knowledge and input on the art of writing successful proposals, not only among early career scientist. The seminar series have attracted participants from all steps of the career ladder.

This time we are pleased to invite you to a seminar held by Professor Arne Jarrick with the inspiring title »Stay true to your curiosity!«. Arne is a professor of history at the Centre for the Study of Cultural Evolution and he recently held the position as Secretary General for Humanities and Social Sciences at the Swedish Research Council (Vetenskapsrådet, VR).

This event is an in-house seminar - free of charge - for researchers at Stockholm University. Since the number of seats is limited, we expect that those who register will also attend. The seminar will be held in English and there will be a coffee break.

Prisma

Forskningsråden VR, Formas och Forte lanserar ett nytt elektroniskt system för forskningsansökningar - Prisma. Från och med oktober i år ska ansökningar till dessa tre råd gå via Prisma och fr.o.m. nästa år ska systemet användas fullt ut för samtliga utlysningar. VR har utlovat information om hur man som forskare använder Prisma och ett informationspaket för användare av systemet. Prefekten förutsätts i Prisma signera ansökningar från sin institution.

Emre Özlü, projektledare vid Avdelningen för forskningsservice, har samordningsansvaret för införandet av Prisma vid SU och fortsätter hålla i kontakterna med råden; vi har även etablerat ett gott samarbete med KI och KTH kring Prisma-frågor. Vi kommer att få tillgång till systemet för test och kontroll i början av oktober.

Forskningservice kommer informera prefekter och föreståndare om Prisma via nyhetsbrevet "Universitetsledningen informerar" för spridning inom respektive institution. Som komplement till VR:s informationspaket upprättar Forskningservice en särskild hemsida med aktuella uppgifter om Prisma. Vi planerar framöver särskilda genomgångar för olika kategorier användare av systemet.

Eventuella frågor kring Prisma besvarar vi tills vidare via e-post till info@fs.su.se.

Förbättrad information på webben till engelskspråkiga medarbetare

Förvaltningschefen har beslutat tillsätta en arbetsgrupp som ska ta fram förslag till hur information på webben till engelskspråkiga medarbetare kan förbättras.

Arbetsgruppen ska ta fram förslag till hur informationen på webben till engelskspråkiga medarbetare kan förbättras med avseende på innehåll och struktur.

Den samlade informationen ska av arbetsgruppen läggas upp på universitetets centrala engelska webbplats, su.se/english, och ges en tydlig webbadress. I uppdraget ingår också att belysa behovet av icke publika sidor hos denna målgrupp. Uppdraget pågår under hösten och övergår sedan i förvaltning med ansvar hos respektive informationsägare under 2015.

Universitetet får ny fastighetsavdelning

Den 1 oktober inrättar Stockholms universitet en ny fastighetsavdelning för att effektivisera arbetet med universitetets samlade lokalbehov. Chefen heter Lena Lundqvist. Hon har lång erfarenhet av strategisk lokalförsörjning och har haft flera chefsroller i offentlig sektor.

Universitetet behöver stora och flexibla lokaler för en föränderlig verksamhet där många stora institutioner kan verka och samverka. Den nya fastighetsavdelningen som inrättas 1 oktober ska arbeta såväl strategiskt som verksamhetsstödande med fokus på universitetets samlade lokalbehov. Avdelningen deltar bland annat aktivt i planeringen av Albano i samarbete med Akademiska Hus och KTH. I Albano planeras för 100 000 kvadratmeter universitetslokaler och 50 000 kvadratmeter bostäder.

Migramovies

Nu startar Migramovies på Cnema! Migramovies är ett samarbetsprojekt mellan flera institutioner och enheter på Linköpings universitet – Campus Norrköping, CNEMA och Norrköpings kommun. I projektet visas spelfilm som på ett eller annat sätt berör migration, etniska identiteter, rasism, och diskriminering, samt hur etnifiering och mångfald påverkar stadsliv, lokalsamhället och arbete. Varje film introduceras av en forskare eller kritiker, som ger ett inspel utifrån sin verksamhet. Med detta inspel, som låter fiktion möta forskning, vill vi också reflektera kring konstens roll i gestaltandet av politiska och sociala frågor.

Who can really be mobile?

During the autumn NAI is co-organizing a series of seminars that explores the concept of mobility in a broad sense. Increased mobility for individuals is considered good for the quality of life as well as for countries' competitiveness. But in several areas, such as the academia, career paths are surrounded by a range of social and cultural barriers. Whose interests serve on an ideal of high mobility and who can really be mobile? Paula Mählick from the Nordic Africa Institute and Carina Carlhed from Uppsala University lead the seminars.

October 22, 9.30-11.00, Nordic Africa Institute, Uppsala

Paula Mählick makes an introduction to the article by Nirmal Puwar (2001) The Racialised Somatic Norm and the Senior Civil Service, Sociology, vol 35 pp 651-670.

December 3, 9.30-11.00, Uppsala University, Blåsenhus campus

Carina Carlhed makes an introduction to the article: Lawler S. Disgusted subjects: the making of middle-class identities. The Sociological Review, 2005, 53 (3), 429- 446.
