

CITY AXIOMS

A Common Ground Forum for Contesting Common Sense Urbanity

CITY AXIOMS is a series of open lectures and discussions on contemporary ideologies and practices of urban design. A city axiom is a concept with an assumed value, what we take for granted as desirable or improper when debating or engaging in solving the problems of urban life. We are interested in the common sense quality of that which precedes and implicitly informs the different stakes in the battles for the rights to shaping and inhabiting the city. Key to understanding such battles, we believe, is the corporate appropriation of the urban commons, but also the emergence of arenas for sharing and exchange where domination is rationalised or contested in new ways or forms. While setting a scene for a general conversation between practice and theory, the series pays special attention to the role of architecture in steering or questioning the direction of urban change. In doing so, it taps into on-going debates on architecture as docile or inimical to market logics and on the relation of aesthetics to the politics of city space.
